

Two procedures can be used for isolation of DNA from cellular extracts: Laird et al., 1991, Nucleic Acids Research., 19: 4293, or the tail DNA isolation procedure. The Laird procedure is faster, but the DNA is not as “clean” as the tail DNA isolation procedure; for this procedure, it is important that the DNA be agitated to dissolve the DNA (step 3).